

What is a Success Group?

The class has been divided into small groups of 4-5; this is your Student Success group. These are your classmates who you will share your writing and get feedback through peer review responses. Research shows that students who form learning communities and develop social relationships with classmates are more successful in completing courses. Get to know your group well; share contact information (I recommend exchanging phone numbers, twitter, email- whatever you most use for communicating), and rely on each for help.

This week's prompt-

Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie's speech on *The Danger of a Single Story* is a lesson on getting to know people as well as caution to be thorough in researching a subject:

1. How does this apply to misconceptions people might have about you or your culture?
2. How does this apply to getting to know your classmates?
3. How does this apply to the research and writing you will do in this class?

Write a brief response to these three questions in your Success Group's Blog. Be sure to read each other's posts and comment on everyone's responses.
